A number of freshwater fish species have been introduced to New Zealand for a variety of reasons. Some of them are purposely introduced to our rivers and lakes, others are escapees from tanks and ponds. Many of these species have become pest fish species, having adverse effects on our native fish species and the habitat they live in. Logan will talk about some of the pest species found in the Horizons Region and the effects they can have on our freshwater systems.

All welcome. Gold coin donation appreciated
